Cooperation between National Armies: Evidence from the ## border regions in the Sahel

Co-author: Marion Richard (UC Louvain/PSE)

ABSTRACT

Military interventions often involve cooperation between different national armies. In this project, we investigate the extent to which the porous international borders in the Sahel region affect geographical patterns of conflict, and how the creation of an international armed force that can cross borders (the G5 Sahel) changed these patterns. We find that the G5 mission lowered the intensity of certain types of violence locally, and that it changed patterns of geographical conflict propagation.
